Mr. Mortrecht Explains.

Te the Editor of the Ledger: You are greatly in error in the charges you made about me in an article in your yesterday's issue. I never borrowed $200 nor any sum in gold from a lady, nor from any one and paid it back in green-backs, nor did I ever, by a threatening letter, nor otherwise, compell Captain Bond or any one else to pay $1500 in gold. The first of the above statements can alone relate to a transaction in 1863, in which $160 was borrowed from me in greenbacks for a lady's use and $140 in gold left with me as security. Fifteen mouths afterward Mr. B. M. Estes, one of the first lawyers in Memphis, brought me my receipt for the gold, repaid me the loan in greenbacks and I returned the gold to him precisely as I received it. The other of above statements, I suppose, reters to a case in which, in January, 1862, a receiver in the Chancery Court was under arrest by the order of Chancellor George Dixon, for disobeying orders of the court to pay money into court in his hands as receiver, and I procured his discharge by becoming responsible for the money. When I did this he promised to pay the money within ten days. Two-and-one-half years passed and it was still unpaid. County-officers had then been elected and civil govern-ment re-established in Shelby county. I was pressed by those to whom the greater part of the money was going to pay up for said receiver, and on inquiry was told he was trading in cotton and making money. I thereupon wrote him a letter which resulted in his paying the amount-not in gold but in currency. This, I suppose, is the threatening letter referred to. If so, I stand by whatever it contains. If the family of said receiver (who is since dead) desire the publication of that letter, I shall not object, provided the true history of the case is

Very respectfully, CHARLES KORTRECHT,

An Infamous Palsehood. To the Editor of the Lodger: At the National speaking last night a so-called lawyer who haunts the police tribunal and offices of magistrates, made an incendiary speech, in which he averred that the Democrats were accustomed to hire pegroes just before the election, and after they had picked cotton would run them away with a shotgun. He said he had known of such occurrences, and would willingly face any man and make this statement. Such speeches are calculated to create a very bad feeling and to promote mischief. When Richmond was in that woman scrape he was not so bold. VERITAS.

Richmond is a specimen of the average National-Republican. The writer terfere with the voters and we would not knows him, and knows no good of this individual.
